

Supriya Kumari

fashion design, modelling & visual merchandising

PORTFOLIO
2025

Supriya Kumari

Fashion design graduate bridging the gap between conceptual research and technical craftsmanship to redefine modern womenswear. I leverage system thinking and iterative material exploration to create expressive silhouettes grounded in structural precision.

SKILLS

- Illustrations
- Draping
- Research
- Garment Construction
- Styling
- Adobe Photoshop
- Adobe Illustrator
- CorelDraw
- CLO3D
- Adobe Indesign

EXPERIENCE

Visual Merchandiser

Landmark Group

August 2025 - Present
(Fulltime)

Merchandiser

Goodwill Fabrics

August 2024 - October 2024
(Internship)

Store Operations

Rareism

March 2023 - April 2023
(Internship)

EDUCATION

Bachelor of Science (Fashion & Apparel Design)

Army Institute of Fashion and Design (affiliated with Bengaluru North University)

August 2022 - August 2025

Reach out to me on

<https://www.linkedin.com/in/supriyakumari02/>

sj3010728@gmail.com

+971 54 374 6930

Nebula Drifts

COLLECTION INSPIRED BY NORTHERN LIGHTS

Within

COLLECTION INSPIRED BY INTERNAL EMOTIONS

Madhubani Paintings

RESEARCH WORK ON TRADITIONAL MADHUBANI PAINTINGS

Nebula Drifts

Nebula Drifts is a womenswear collection inspired by the ethereal beauty of the northern lights. The project explores the shifting colors and luminous movement of the aurora through innovative surface experimentation.

This Project explores the beauty of sky - colors of northern lights . It showcases the beauty of the nature that is transforming itself every moments. It moves between softness and strength, blending subtle textures with striking details, creating a mood that is reflective yet bold. There's a sense of depth in every piece, as if each element was chosen not just to be seen, but to be felt - evoking curiosity, individuality, and a refined, understated drama.

Structured yet fluid forms symbolize the contrast between cosmic power and delicate beauty, while experimental materials enhance the futuristic narrative. Nebula Drifts is not just fashion—it is an immersive visual experience that transforms the wearer into a living embodiment of the sky's most magical phenomenon.

Nebula Drifts

is a Conceptual Futuristic Collection that captures the mesmerizing flow and fluidity of the Northern Lights through dynamic silhouettes and radiant hues. The collection reflects the seamless movement of light and color, blending technology-inspired elements with an ethereal, contemporary aesthetic.

Color Identity

*Symbolises the great skyline.
Represents the depth and canvas to present our imaginations.*

PANTONE® 19-4008
TCX Meteorite

Represents the longest and the biggest northern way that is seen through the human eye and is common

PANTONE® 18-6024
TCX Amazon

Symbolises the upper sky and the top most layer of northern lights

PANTONE® 16-4834
TCX Bluebird

Design Development

Material Exploration

Heavy satin has been used for base for its strength and texture

BLACK IS USED AS THE BASE COLOR THROUGHOUT THE COLLECTION

IRIDESCENT DISK

COTTON

CHIFFON

TULLE

NET

Concept Sketch

Gallery

Within

Within is a conceptual collection that explores the profound beauty of human emotions through the inspiration of internal body organs. This collection turns inward, celebrating the universe that exists within the human body.

Within is a conceptual collection that explores the profound beauty of human emotions through the inspiration of internal body organs. This collection turns inward, celebrating the universe that exists within the human body.

The project interprets the organic forms, textures, and rhythmic functions of internal organs as symbols of emotional depth, vulnerability, strength, and resilience. Flowing silhouettes mimic the softness of veins and arteries, while sculptural structures echo the protective strength of the ribcage and heart.

Surface experimentation plays a vital role in translating this concept. Layered fabrics represent the complexity of human feelings, translucent materials suggest fragility and openness, and structured elements symbolize inner power and endurance.

Just as organs work silently yet powerfully beneath the surface, this collection reveals that true beauty lies within. Beauty Within transforms anatomical inspiration into expressive womenswear, reminding us that the most radiant light is not only in the sky, but inside every human soul.

Beyond the tactile skin lies a hidden masterpiece of biological engineering and ethereal light. This collection translates the intricate textures of our internal landscape : from the rhythmic pulse of the heart to the lace-like fragility of the alveoli, into a visual narrative of grace. By celebrating the 'goodness' held within, we reveal that our most vital functions are also our most beautiful designs: a sanctuary of light protected by a cage of bone.

Fragility

Anatomy of Grace

Repetitive curved structure

Organic branching patterns

Symbol of Life and Emotions

Concept Sketches

Silhouette Board

The dominant red tones symbolize life, blood, passion, and emotional intensity, directly connecting the designs to the human heart and inner energy. Each silhouette explores how the body can become a canvas to express internal structures through cut-outs, layered forms, and wrapped volumes.

The fitted shapes highlight the natural curves of the female body, while elements like rib-like cut panels, structured bodices, and cocoon drapes mimic internal anatomy in an abstract way. The collection balances softness and strength, just like human emotions, through both body-hugging silhouettes and exaggerated forms. Overall, this silhouette board clearly communicates the theme of inner beauty, transforming the hidden aspects of the human body into bold, expressive, and artistic fashion statements.

Madhubani Paintings

The art of Madhubani painting is a traditional style of painting developed in the Mithila region, particularly in the villages of Jitwarpur and Ranti, near the city of Madhubani. Literally, the word Madhubani means “honey forest.”

It is believed that King Janak, the ruler of the Mithila Kingdom in the 8th or 7th century BCE, asked artists to develop these paintings in order to capture the moments of his daughter Sita’s wedding to Prince Rama (from the Hindu epic Ramayana).

The paintings were originally the exclusive domain of women artists, and the knowledge was passed down from generation to generation. Although traditionally created by women, men are now increasingly involved to meet market demand. The traditional process of making this art has also been modified.

Traditionally, the paintings were done by hand on plastered or mud walls, but due to commercial demand, they are now created on paper and cloth. The paintings are primarily religious in nature. The central themes revolve around love and fertility. They are made in special rooms of the house, such as the prayer room, ritual area, bridal room, or on the main walls of the village to welcome visitors.

Drawings of nature and mythology are adapted according to the style of each region and individual artist. Common themes include the worship of Hindu deities and episodes from sacred texts, such as Radha and Krishna, Rama, Shiva, Ganesha, Lakshmi, Saraswati, monkeys, the sun, the moon, the Tulsi plant, Deep (a traditional earthen lamp symbolizing happiness), wedding scenes, and other social events.

For painting, cotton wrapped around a bamboo stick is used as a brush. The colours are prepared manually by the artists. Black is made by mixing soot with cow dung; yellow is prepared from turmeric and banyan leaf milk; blue is extracted from indigo; red from the Kusum flower; green from applewood leaves; white from rice powder; and orange from the Palash flower.

The main styles of Madhubani paintings include the Maithili Brahmin style and the Kayastha style, characteristic of the villages of Jitwarpur and Ranti near Madhubani. Today, Madhubani has become a centre of commercial activity. Young people are actively involved in arranging handmade paper and preparing natural colours.

In earlier times, this art was created on mud walls or soil ground during auspicious occasions and erased the next day. This is why many early works were not preserved. In a sense, these artworks were natural and temporary. However, the art was easily passed from one generation to another without technical tools. This continuous transfer of knowledge led to expansion through experimentation and creativity.

Modern Madhubani Paintings

The commercialization of Madhubani paintings began in 1962 CE when a foreign artist traveling through the town was attracted by the murals. He encouraged women to paint similar drawings on paper so he could take them abroad and exhibit them. This idea was highly successful and marked the beginning of commercialization.

Mithila or Madhubani paintings continue to be internationally acclaimed. They primarily depict nature, Hindu mythological figures, and themes associated with deities, fish, birds, animals, and natural elements such as the sun and moon. Religious plants like Tulsi and the banyan tree are also common motifs. Scenes from royal courts and social events like weddings are widely painted.

Traditionally, Madhubani paintings have two forms:

1. Bhittichitra (paintings on mud walls)
2. Aripana (paintings on ground soil)

Bhittichitra is created on the mud walls of houses, especially in the prayer room, the newlywed couple's room, and the drawing room. These paintings are made during auspicious occasions like marriage, Upanayana, Dussehra, and Diwali.

The uniqueness of this art lies in its selective artistic expression. Earlier, the paintings were temporary and erased after ceremonies, which is why they were not preserved. Despite this, the art survived through oral tradition and generational transfer of knowledge.

The artworks were not merely symbolic representations of epic stories; they were direct expressions of Hindu mythology and social life. The use of colours was deeply connected with religious beliefs and hopes for well-being.

Some scholars suggest that Madhubani paintings are linked to tantric culture in ancient India, though this theory is debated. The Mithila region has historically been a centre of tantric practices for both Shaiva and Shakti communities. Literary references to this connection are found in the works of the poet Vidyapati from the 12th century CE.

Although the origin of this art is popularly associated with the Ramayana period, historical documentation is limited. W.G. Archer, a British collector during the colonial period, documented and named it Mithila Art in the 1940s.

Growth and Global Recognition

The women of Mithila have transformed this art into an internationally admired form. In the 1960s, government officials supported its promotion to improve the financial conditions of artists. This led to large-scale commercialization for global markets.

Recent initiatives by local governments, NGOs, and cultural organizations have further increased its popularity. In fashion, many designers have launched Madhubani-inspired collections, including stoles, sarees, salwar kameez, and long skirts. Everyday products like pen cases, bags, and diaries are also decorated with Mithila art.

With digital technology and special-interest tourism growing rapidly, Madhubani art has become an important cultural attraction. Tourism plays a vital role in promoting local heritage and generating employment opportunities.

Art enthusiasts worldwide have shown great interest in rural tourism and Indian heritage. Madhubani paintings are especially popular in Japan, Germany, France, and the USA. The Mithila Museum in Tokamachi, Japan, exhibits around 1,000 Madhubani paintings of various themes and styles.

Several books and research papers have been written on this art form. The Master Craftsmen Association of Mithila, founded in 1977 CE, supports artists by organizing exhibitions and sales.

Recently, government buildings in Madhubani city - including the railway station, town hall, administrative offices, and government bungalows, have been decorated with Madhubani paintings. Even long-distance train coaches in India have been transformed into moving canvases of this art.

Through these collective efforts of artists and the government, Madhubani painting is once again emerging as a major art form on the global artistic canvas.

Thank you